Access to further study

This qualification gives access to Doctoral studies, provided that the student has completed a minimum of 300 ECTS in the overall teachings of Bachelor and Master.

Stated objectives associated with the qualification and professional status (if applicable)

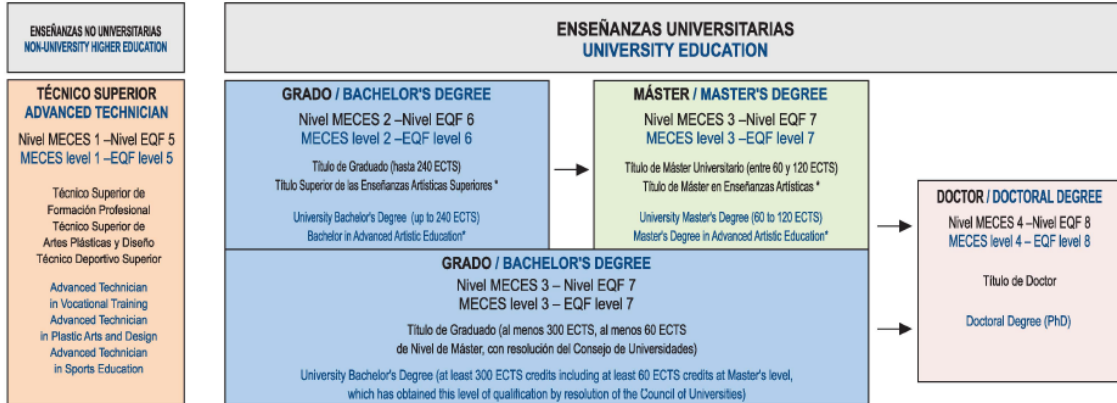

This Master's Degree aims to offer a sound formation specialized in gender studies, from a multidisciplinary perspective (historical, legal, humanistic, sociological, psychological, artistic, literary, educational...). It also intends to develop the study of social and cultural patterns, as well as the construction of new models based on principles of equality. In addition, it also aims to provide procedural methodologies and research instruments in order to promote a gender perspective in any academic or professional career.

This Master's Degree develops the general competency to analyze and critically evaluate both discrimination and inequality derived from gender identity in multidisciplinary contexts. It also seeks to develop the more specific capacity of constructing and re-conceptualising historical constructions of different cultural roles attributed to women and men in a large range of fields: sociological, philosophical, literary, political, scientific, technological, educational... Other competencies developed in this Master's are: the capacity of producing criticism and self-criticism towards social models adopted for men and women in any of their gender identities, as well as the capacity of developing and transmitting new models within parameters of respect and equality, in order to more justly regulate relationships between men and women.
